

ABSTRACT OF THE DISCLOSURE

A method for link quality control in a wireless communications network includes determining whether an indicator of link imbalance exists among a plurality of base stations associated with a mobile unit, and implementing a control action to help prevent at least one of fading or signal cutoff between the mobile unit and at least one of the base stations, if the indicator indicates that link imbalance exists.